The story of an emphatic dictation

Dear readers,

Please allow me a few lines to introduce the following text:
'I am not a father', but all the words, sentences and expression in it are mine, but not the substantive statement.

In order to explain what I mean by that, please allow me to elaborate a little.

Even as a child, I rejected every kind of religion. I attended church services only when I had to, and later to please my parents. On the morning of my fourteenth birthday, I withdrew from religious education, the only pupil at a large school to do so. This almost broke my father's heart, especially since the school administration naturally informed my parents immediately. Out of love for them, I agreed to speak with our parish priest. Recounting that conversation here would go beyond the scope of these lines, so for now let me simply say:

The parish priest then advised my parents to give me my own 'way'.

As a result, I also renounced a confirmation. I did not care about religions and gods! In hindsight, I am now aware that I do not want to believe, but experience.

After the end of my school years, I completed an apprenticeship as a retail merchant and earned my bread rolls as a salesman in various fields.

Already during my apprenticeship years, I liked to sell some kind of 'crap' to strangers, which they didn't need or want; virtually every person I met as a salesman became my customer; I thought of myself as the ultimate 'manipulator', capable of selling the Eskimo a refrigerator and a solarium to a person of color.

I had no qualms, because if you come into a car dealership, you don't look for the station mission, and the lion eats all those who go into his cave. Yeah, I was one of those guys you'd better not meet in a store.

But then there was also another side of me. Again and again people crossed my path who were in emotional or totally distracted 'emergency situations' and each time I helped them, often without directly noticing it myself.

At some point, I also noticed that the appropriate means, whether money, experience, knowledge, rhetoric, contacts, etc., were always available at the right moment to be able to help at all.

On the one hand there was the ruthless salesman, who puffs up everything to everyone and on the other a helper, someone who can never look away, falls the "distress" in front of his own feet.

In addition, I was personally very successful financially (already at the age of 25 I drove a BMW 750 iL), but I could not keep this 'prosperity'. As I earned the money, it tugged between my fingers.

The years passed, 30 candles graced my birthday cake and so one afternoon I found myself sitting next to my 'Protzkarre' under a tree in a forest clearing and asked myself the question of the meaning.

Well, - and then it actually happened: I received a 'response'. Please do not miss me now, I never hear 'voices' in my head. Rather, it is a kind of language (expression), which is based on emotions (feelings) and images (metaphors). To the question, for example, why I am such a "good" servant of mammon and yet have a "heart" for others at the right time, why I always meet these "poor" people in "need" and cannot simply care? - I received the following answer:

"That ability to "look" at people in their "soul" and to recognize what they need most, what really torments them, you have from me."

Since that day, I didn't want to sell anything to anyone anymore, and I realized, a super seller -- I'm not, because this way of selling, I feel today, is highly immoral!

Granted, this moment was such a powerful 'spiritual' event that, for a short time, I was thrown a little off the track.

For so many things I did, I was literally ashamed in 'ground and soil' and so my first thought was: I have to become a pastor. However, a short search on Google later, I relativized this 'desire'. Seven years of breadless education and all this stuff, plus my general attitude to religions. So what should I do? So I asked, "If you don't want to be a priest, just open a restaurant" -- "What should I do?" -- "Yes, a committed innkeeper is always a good psychotherapist."

I understood.

For the next seven years I ran two restaurants and what happened in this time in terms of interpersonal, to tell all this, it would fill books.

Physically and psychologically, I gave EVERYTHING, and it wasn't until shortly before my total collapse that I was 'redeemed' by simply going bust.

Today I like to pass on my knowledge as a management consultant and you probably already think it: I will be called - because he just does not want to 'run around' the shop, but when I go, it is the people who find new 'ways'.

And then there came the day when my father had heart surgery.

I wrestled with me. Should I say anything? - "Get a second opinion." - That night, before it happened, I did not sleep. Two or three times I saw myself sitting in the car to go to his hospital and say - "Don't do it, don't do it" - but I did nothing of the kind, because I 'felt' and 'confided' - that's how it must be.

For a very long time, my father did not recover from this operation, and almost a year went by, and whenever things got a little better, there was cause for hope, he suffered a serious relapse.

On Christmas 2013 - Christmas Eve at 6 p.m. - I held his hand in the clinic and, according to the doctors, expected his imminent ('again') death. During this time, I experienced a level of emotional pain that I had no idea that you can feel and endure as a person. How will this be with my father?

So one night I was lying on my sofa, thinking to my father who was struggling for his life in an intensive care unit, asking the question - no - I REQUIRE:

"Tell me the truth of all being, in a language that I understand, without philosophy, moral "wing," "flower and consolation" -- just the naked truth!"

- So this is how he came into being, in one night, this text: "I am not a father".

Well, now you can say, this is based on an emotional distress, synapse smack as a 'valve' for mind stabilization, and that's a possibility that I was considering, so I searched the Internet for similar views or statements.

In ALL religions I found something. For example, the saying "Ego sum, qui sum." - JHWH translates as "I am who

I am" or "Si vis amari, ama!" (if you want to be loved, then love!) almost all statements refer to Jesus and Buddha. - I do not speak Latin at all and this connection was not known to me.

Even the story of creation, which I knew as a child, of course, and then read later, today has a very different "sound" for me. Knowledge "driven" us out of "Paradise", but here freedom is our great reward. In this we make mistakes, but we learn from insight.

It's not for nothing that it says "The Ten Commandments" and not "The Ten Prohibitions." "You shall not murder," but if you do this, because it is not forbidden to you by "God" - because then you could not do this, then live with the consequences!

I never really understood the 'historical Jesus' as a child either. What should all this 'talk' about 'honey-sweet' love do? Today I understand: not every person to whom I have wronged can I ask for forgiveness personally, but I can, at any time, forgive everything that has been done to me to others.

If every man on earth were to do this, the eternal cycle of guilt and atonement (if you kill my brother, I will take yours) would be interrupted.

But in order to truly be able to do this, really everything that was, with, in and around one is to 'bless', for this everyone first has to recognize and understand everything in the core for himself. Real love lets go and knows no desire! So we as humanity still have a long way to go.

Now what do I do with this text? First of all, I said THANK YOU! But as the preface says, "This text is not for humanity, but only for you...", so today I know: everyone has the right to their own experience, whatever it may look and feel like.

Or in other words: Only those who do not search outside, but experience themselves, also believe what they find in the end.

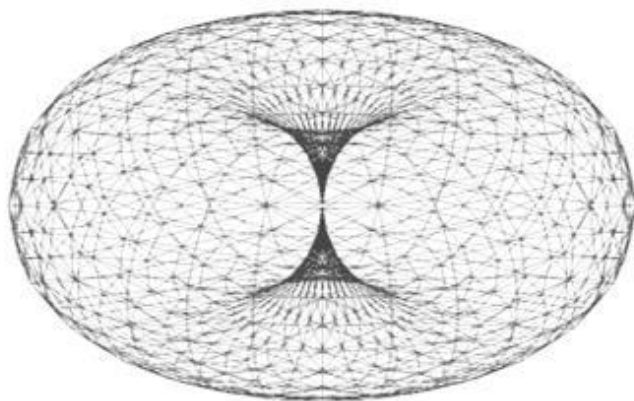

We are not 'measured' by our actions, but by the motives that underlie them.

I do not help because this gives me personal satisfaction, but simply because I can, so I pass on the text as I have received it, as a 'gift' to anyone who wants to and can accept it.

So if you get the feeling when reading the following lines, it's not - everything has to be completely different - put it away and don't worry about it, because I don't want to convince anyone of anything.

Sebastian Schmitz says, "The view of my creation pains infinitely and delights to the same extent."

I am not a father

- Ego sum, qui sum. -

Foreword

Since the beginning, people have looked at the stars and asked themselves the one, all-encompassing question: "What am I, where is the origin of all being and why is it so bitter, -my world?"

In each epoch they believed in the supernatural, and according to the "Zeitgeist" they devised various "models of thought" to explain what one cannot comprehend even with the mind.

Countless religions were conceived and passed away in insignificance. To begin with, all religions ever existing, practiced and arising today do not proclaim the truth, but offer a mythological view of the inexplicable and yet, all are justified, they arise and pass away in the respective zeitgeist, as well as within the framework of comprehensibility.

People have had a very long time until today and never, at any time, have I, out of my own desire, actively intervened in the final development.

One thing is above all things: the free will of the spirit. It is an indispensable condition to be able to actually comprehend:

To know who you are, you must first know what you are not.

So understand the following text. If it is in its meaning only what you want to read. Decide for yourself about meaning and truth. Your will is done - not mine. This is not addressed to humanity, but only to you, since you asked and wanted to understand - why is it, the world, so much cruelty and love at the same time.

The truth is so simple--it wouldn't take words like this--but it's your mind that thirsts for the great puzzles and seeks no answer in the conclusive.

Why also take the straight, direct path, when winding paths offer you endless possibilities of discovery and experience, only he who truly comprehends and understands his own self - he finds.

"No one comes to the Father but through me," so once proclaimed a man whom you call Jesus today.

He was right, because this means: "No one becomes like me who does not act, feel and think like me."

He understood: I am not a father and you are not my children!

The nature of life

Everything that exists -- it follows its essence -- it likes to confuse this with purpose, meaning the basic quality without intention.

As an example, I would like to describe the sun.

Complex chemical and physical processes are constantly taking place on and within it, and you can feel and experience the effect every day, and it is a fundamental prerequisite for your existence, for all life, yet the sun itself does not care. It follows, regardless of existence and life, simply its being, without any concrete intention. If everything is dependent on it now, it is only because something new depends on its being. It was there first.

Maybe you can't imagine life without the sun, but here I say, just because you don't know it, in the deepest parts of your oceans, for example, there is life that has never seen light.

It is mythologically one of the first images to describe divinity. In fact, quite a few religions have their origins in a 'sun cult'. Realizing the absolute importance of their existence, people worshipped the sun as a visible deity in the sky and worshipped it.

But what good is it if, on a cold winter day, you pray to her, "Radier and warmer me, I threaten to freeze" - or you roam the desert, "Less, - I die of thirst". - Nothing will happen. She can not do otherwise and follows her being. Of your distress, even existence, - of the earth, she knows nothing and she absolutely does not care.

Now, in your mind's eye, look at a strong tree in the middle of a forest, and it also has a being and will follow it unconditionally. Without the plant world, your existence would not be possible, because it produces the oxygen and food it needs, but it doesn't care much about it, the forest and the entire botanical existence, and you only use it for one reason - because it exists and it became before you.

It's the same with viruses, bacteria, insects and animals. They all follow their being. Yersinia pestis kills a person within a few days, and yet that's not his intention, because he ends up passing away in the body of his host. He corresponds to his being.

A fool is - who wants to caress a free lion and then complains of being eaten.

The essence of all things and the order of existence which has become dependent on each other in a chronological connection, and yet, viewed in isolation, without any definite determination.

When a tsunami devastates densely built-up coastal regions and kills hundreds of thousands, it is because planet Earth follows its nature and the countless die for one reason only: they were on the ground.

To understand the essence of things in their chronological dependence is so important because only understanding makes it possible to understand my essence. Whenever great natural disasters, pandemics, famines, suffering and misery of all existence occur, I am often blamed. "God's punishment has come upon us" - so I hear it from the beginning of time.

Being basically means free life with no specific purpose or purpose, you are mistaken if you think the sun is a dead star on which only physical / chemical processes take place, whatever you can ever grasp with your senses, in whatever way, is already 'life'.

Everything new always makes use of what already exists, an infinite chronological sequence of usability of an already existing entity.

The bird eats the worm only - because it is present.

My nature

If entity means life and I have it, do I live? - Yes! - I am life in itself, absolutely real, uncreated, like the universe, which knows neither beginning nor end.

My essence can be described in one word: love, but this has been transfigured in the course of history in a most misunderstood way, and for this reason replace in your thoughts 'divine love' with absolute understanding, and 'human' with desire.

Butterflies in the belly, longing, great feelings, being in love, but as soon as you think you've found happiness, you're also immediately afraid of losing it. Jealousy, bondage, strife and loss can be the result. You see, this is not what I mean by the word love.

I am absolutely real and my essence is love, without any condition, one that establishes its being in all-encompassing understanding, through its own lived experience.

In that sense, I am everything that exists.

For understanding, experience is a prerequisite. I have already experienced everything, and so I am all that is, life itself.

You've read: it's meaningless to ask an entity to change in your favor. The sun remains what it is, no matter how much you worship and plead. So does it make sense when you pray to me? Yes, and no, is my honest answer. It makes a difference whether you speak to me 'in love' or 'from that'.

Please don't misunderstand me, I never value a concern. Acting out of love usually has an ununderstood self-motive, whereas actions in love are always based on understanding.

So if you freeze, I won't let the sun shine warmer for you -- it's against the entity. If I were to act on your behalf, the consequences would be devastating. Everything that became later than the sun depends on it in your own entity. The chronological dependence would get out of joints. Life on earth would be immediately endangered in its existence. In the end, you would have nothing of the brief moment of warmth given.

Don't worry, I have an entity, but I am spirit.

Out of pleasure to yourself, you can ask me to let the sun stole warmer for you and nothing will happen, but in love you could ask not to freeze to death, which allows me to draw your attention to the 'well-heated coffee shop' obliquely opposite, which you have not seen just before for the babbling.

If you understood, your clothes would be warm, this need would have been unnecessary.

So it's meaningless to call me whenever you're pursuing a motive that goes against the essence of another existence. Everything that becomes is always the sequence of what is.

You don't depend on me in your existence. Gratitude isn't necessary to me.

However, to understand me in its entirety and to understand everything in its essence contains within itself the greatest gift that you can give yourself. - But more on this later.

The nature of the human being

You, as a 'human' being, stand in chronological order almost at the end of a very long period of creation. You could say it took an infinite amount of effort for you to become. Measured in terrestrial time, in your galaxy more than 20 billion years of being after being and always in chronological order of things that had become before.

Even if the effort was huge, the process of becoming and deceasing did not create the slightest hardship. Life always arises in love, out of itself.

The core of your being is basically the same as that of any existence. Without any specific purpose or intention? - Not in your case! In books you can read "God created human beings in his image". This statement is actually true - but it means my mind. You have an entity, but you are spirit, and in this capacity we are alike. The only difference is the 'measure' of understanding.

Figuratively speaking, imagine:

You live in an evergreen meadow, surrounded by plants and tame animals that feed you, clean water flows in unlimited abundance. To survive, all you need to do is reach out your hand and take what gives you life. You're in the Garden of Eden. Now ask yourself: What would you be in such a place, without any challenge?

It corresponds to your being to live, but your mind thirsts for experience, mind for knowledge.

One day you would frustrately leave your usual place and move far beyond the horizon, only to realize - even in every new place, everything is as it always was.

The fact that the space is absolutely perfect, attuned solely to your being, deprives you of any ability to make a decision, because a free choice has no new experience in it, no understanding.

You realize that to explore one's own being, to fully savour life in its entirety with an awake mind, to make it new in the sense of one's being, it takes more than just perfection.

Own knowledge was the beginning of your being.

Like the ONE that is EVERYTHING and therefore does not know WHAT it is, so have you been, like the sea that knows no drop, and like light that does not know what darkness is.

This is what I mean in both the spiritual and the worldly sense: on the day you were born, everything had no meaning or name for you.

In order to experience yourself, you need the division of all being into its beings, or in other words, you experience your own limitation as enrichment in matter - your reality.

Is the world perfect, the interplay of all elements, stars and planets? You've probably read somewhere before, God is all-knowing, all-powerful, and so one that I've created should still reflect the measure of all things for the term perfection.

If it were perfect, you wouldn't even know the word, let alone its meaning.

Chaos is the beginning of all being, nothing has become perfect, but always optimally adapted.

You remember the chronological dependence of all entities? Everything new always uses what is there, so you are also the optimal adaptation, in a very long order of entities that have become.

Have you ever walked through a forest left in nature? Everywhere, crisscrossing, entities arise and pass away. No paths, angles, circles disturb the harmony of the chaotic here, you feel free - breathe through. So from now on, do not curse children when they manufacture a chaos, they correspond to their being.

So what is 'human nature':

First of all, you recognize yourself through the body. It's, you'll imagine, perfectly adapted to your surrounding reality. Its senses allow you to have any kind of spatial orientation. A physicist would define it as a heat engine, food is its fuel.

Then there's your mind. It's constantly, at all times, exploring your being and everything that's in, with and around you. Nothing challenges it more than a misunderstood puzzle.

If you don't notice your mind the least, you can call it a soul, and experience is what it thirsts for, and it's really just that, and it doesn't matter to it whether you value an experience as good or bad, but what matters is intensity.

Your 'spirit' does not value, it experiences itself.

On the day you were born, you were already an entity, in the totality of body, mind and spirit, and every moment you experienced a new experience, your perception changed, in every moment you realized, your mind evolved, and in the sum of all things, you continually expand your awareness of the context of everything.

A fire warms you, but if you disregard its nature, it will burn your house.

Yes, - in order to live you have to breathe, eat, drink, sleep, go to the toilet, wander from here to there, etc., just like everyone else on earth, but how you do - what you feel - it is entirely up to you.

You are in your being, in each new moment, always the sum of all that you have experienced and how you have understood it.

So your "human nature" is:

What you are now, in this and every new moment, in your overall viewed development.

The nature of the collective

The collective is the primordial essence of all being.

Looking at a picture of the galaxy, you can see an almost innumerable abundance of celestial bodies, it is always in motion, everything that exists in and with it, in constant interaction and dependence on each other, new, as you know, always depends on what already exists.

Now, for comparison, imagine a fly. How much collective is in it? As a body, it's an entity to which you give a name. It has eyes, wings, legs, etc., and only the interplay of all the details makes it what it is.

Think much smaller now.

What, referring to matter, is the collective that made it? What is the difference to the galaxy?

Only in the arrangement of those smallest parts of what you know as matter, they are all in themselves, the origin of every being and always form a collective, the entity.

So everything that exists is formed out of everything and in constant dependence and interaction with each other.

In this way I am not with you, but you are in and out of me.

The nature of the collective: humanity

On the question which affects you the most, why your world is as you know it:

Remember - I have an entity, but I am spirit and in the quality we are alike.

Imagine that there were no human beings living on Earth. What would it look like? It won't be hard for you if, in terms of contemporary history, they only existed yesterday and how the world was before you -- you know it from geography lessons.

My essence is love, which calls no condition, and in this love I created everything that exists - out of itself.

The only difference between you and me is the level of understanding of EVERYTHING, and in that sense I created you in love, absolutely naked, free from all that is within you, so that you can shape and experience for yourself what is with you, and ultimately, through experience, understand what you really are.

In order to explain why in your world, let us distinguish between your creation and mine, and in the aspect - the Creator - we are the same, but I always create in love, but you mostly create from it.

Please do not recognize the censure now, but rather the prerequisite to experience yourself.

What exactly do I mean by the statement? I want to describe it using the example of the entity that has influenced you and your world to this day most urgently: your money.

First, - how did it arise, your creation, - the money:

When the people once stopped wandering across the continents, they found the hunting and gathering too laborious, they settled down, built a solid roof and cultivated the field.

Very soon, however, they noticed that in the field grows more than you can ever eat. No one likes to live on their own bread and fruit alone in the long run, and so people exchanged what they had for things of desire.

To put an end to the eternal haggling of the value of all things - "How many eggs do you give me for a chicken"? - it required an independent fixed intermediate value, defined in an object, universally exchangeable for everything and everything.

Whether it exists in the form of shells, glass beads, gold, coins or paper, it doesn't matter at first. Absolutely a great thing - easy to transport and easy to maintain. And who has enough of it no longer farms the field, but simply pays with his money a labor force.

Oops, and it's happened, money changed its nature. If it was once meant only to exchange the things that were created, it suddenly woke up itself as a matter of desirability.

Few understood the new entity quickly, and not much time passed, and many pile up to the ceiling of the room.

Most, however, did not understand and only wanted to have it. so few became infinitely rich and their houses became castles, later castles.

Money rules the world, and whoever calls much of it his own, henceforth rules over all the others - whom no one knows. The once free hunter and wanderer became the servant of his masters.

What is its essence today?

Objectively, it fulfills the characteristic of a drug: cheap to produce, readily available, in its use you become addicted, always want more, and in your world you have become totally dependent on your money.

Those who first understood the new essence of money have consciously made it that.

Did you know that nowadays all existing money is based on debt? Whenever someone borrows it, it creates something new and only because of interest and compound interest. It creates itself today - without you! The more of it exists - the more laborious you have to bend for the sake of less. Yes, - you even sell your own entity for money.

First you use all the new things with joy, and a little later they dominate you. You don't wear clothes because you don't have fur, but you don't have fur because you wear clothes. Everything is in constant interaction with everything, as you know.

You are the creator of your world, you are to shape matter as it pleases you, but now look at your world, your fellow human beings, the livestock.

Go out of your house, and as much as you look around you will find almost nothing else that came into being in love. Where you go and stand, out of love are all things, the love of money!

Now you know why your world is so, - as you often do not like it.

Everything is connected to everything and in constant interaction, - this is how you experience yourself.

So the next time, meaning liberates, your work for others torments you and you say to yourself, "This is not me, should this be all?" - then you are right and are richer by a decisive insight!

You have understood: Who wants to know who he is, he first experiences what he is not.

The meaning of your existence

Now when you say, "No, I'm not like that. I didn't create this world and mine would be a completely different world," I say, "Knowledge is in your mind, because you've done, experienced and understood everything countless times."

Generally assume: whatever you understand in the context of all togetherness and everything in your world - in essence, with your consciousness, understand with reason, you can feel completely emotionally - so you have already experienced countless times. You constantly disregard the entities of other existences. Every dispute, all wars, just what you call bad and evil - it is only for one reason: your lack of understanding and the consequences that result from it. As you experience everything, so you learn to understand.

Naked knowledge in itself is meaning-freed for you. Only a self-lived and fully understood experience finally allows you to realize the totality of the being of an entity.

Imagine - a native of the Amazon wants to know from you what snow is and you try to explain it accordingly.

A thousand words you can use - as much as you want to describe its consistency, its coldness and whatever comes to mind, down to the smallest detail and as much as you try, it will not even begin to grasp the essence of snow.

Even if you got snow, pushed into his hands, he still would not fully understand.

Ultimately, you only have the opportunity to send him to the mountains in winter.

Or, a little boy asks his dad, "What's an orgasm?" You laugh? - Kids are just like that. He picked up the term at school. What's his dad supposed to say? - You know!

In your reality, you live in duality, everything has its opposite, and so you define each being.

How would you know what cold is if you don't know the warmth: no high without low, top without bottom, joy without sorrow, happiness without pain, light without darkness, good without evil.

What the bandwidth is for you depends on the spectrum of your experience. An African native has a different definition of cold than the Eskimo at the North Pole.

There is also a duality in your spiritual world, and in a single denominator, you are able to feel in two ways: love and fear, and every conceivable feeling of you is based either on one side or the other.

Sorrow is based on fear, joy is based on love, and again, the range of what you feel on one side or the other depends on your level of experience.

It's the same with your actions: arguing based on fear, understanding based on love, clinging to fear, letting go of love, ruling on fear, guiding on love, possessiveness based on fear, sharing based on love.

What kind of action does not necessarily have to be real, - you know it.

Now I would like to give you my 'point of view' and you may make it your own.

I always see and feel everything as it is, so no duality.

Ask yourself: does darkness really exist, - is it real? - After all, it is dark at night, or when you turn off the light. No, - darkness is not real and therefore irrelevant to me. Darkness is only the absence of light, you can measure it, the darkness is not. Is evil real? - no, it is only the absence of good.

Is cold real? At -273.15°C , nothing gets colder -- all the molecules have come to a standstill. Heat is vibration, and anything measurable above zero is heat. Sorrow is the absence of joy.

Everything is always exactly what it is: its essence; only incomprehension requires comparison.

So if you want to go much faster on your journey to the Incarnation, then understand everything, especially human and animal, as it is - in its essence and not as you want it to be - or in other words, don't get angry from now on, no matter who or what! Now you know the cause of your frustration, - your own misunderstanding.

Above all, don't compare yourself to others. Whether one has more than you, or less, another religion or belief, heterosexual, gay, lesbian, or whatever, what language, skin color, beautiful, ugly, fragrant, stinking, incredibly smart or sack stupid, it shouldn't bother you.

No matter how another person confronts you, crosses your path, - see, understand, understand his being and you, the yours.

By the way, all the people on earth are related in the literal sense, you all became of one primordial cell and are brothers and sisters of the same blood.

Do you know the saying: "Everyone will reap what he sows"? - Or the term "compensatory justice"? It should be especially close to your own 'heart'.

Whatever you do to another entity, no matter what being, whether consciously or accidentally, directly or indirectly, in terms of 'bad', so act against its entity and do not make you fully aware of the consequences, do not fully understand and can emotionally understand, will also become your own experience in the effect.

Not because you are punished for this, but so that you can understand, understand and understand from your own lived experience.

This is not based on my idea, but was from the beginning your express desire and will.

If you want to know exactly, all things, about every being, and if it often hurts me "evil" while "watching", so be it, - it is promised, because I love you!

If, for example, you're constantly ranting, insulting and degrading about the lazy, unemployed, parasitic bums, then... well, you know, I really don't want to scare you, just encourage you a little bit of your own sensitivity.

OK, you could say,

"What's the whole thing, he says of himself, he is everything that exists, knows everything, can do everything and is all-powerful. Let him just give me his divine power and then I do all things as they please me."

And I can understand your objection, but here I say, and please forgive me the comparison, I really don't want to offend you:

If I were to give you my 'divine power'--leave things to all beings--it would be like putting a chimpanzee, on a well-visited pedestrian street, in a Lamborghini and showing him how he turns the ignition key and engages a gear.

Please believe me, within the smallest fraction of a second, not only would you have destroyed yourself, but also the entire universe, and you really should not 'live through' the consequences of this experience.

Yes, an 'earthly life', it will never be enough to fully understand all beings, all that is, and so you have not only this one.

You are an ancient spirit, in a new being, and you experience yourself, your being, every being and everything that exists in this context, and at some point, in your own way, in this way, everyone becomes completely like me.

So it was your desire, so I created you, in my image, and this is the reason of your self-chosen being.

Suffering without your involvement?

You have read that all evil, evil, wars and all suffering resulting from them are based on the incomprehension of an entity, or, to put it bluntly, is self-made by you and your kind.

But what about suffering, which is not immediately explained by your incomprehension: why children die, why people are born disabled, crippled in their limbs and senses, - why there is disease and death.

First of all, you have to differentiate here in the most precise way.

For example, in the early 1960s, the Contergan scandal, a drug that was also given to pregnant women, unfortunately with fatal consequences for the expectant human being. They were born with crippled limbs. That suffering is based on misunderstanding, the essence of the drug violated that of the expectant body.

So, or similarly, it can also happen if the mother smokes in her pregnancy, enjoys alcohol, the wrong one, too little / too much food, - even lets an abortion be carried out. But also the man makes his contribution. The quality of his sperm is directly related to the way of life. Also a massive weakening of the person who has become can be the result, so that in the course of the child will die.

Also influences from outside, without any direct action of their own, such as e.g.

high levels of toxicity due to environmental pollution, can have corresponding effects.

A disproportionate number of diseases, the resulting suffering and death, at any age, are the cause of disregard for entities, due to increasing industrialization and the resulting way of life.

Simply put, you are increasingly poisoning yourself!

Everything described above is, directly or indirectly, suffering and death caused by you, your fellow human beings, on the basis of disregard for an entity, usually out of misunderstanding.

Once upon a time, people died agonizingly from the plague until they understood the cause and were able to heal afterwards, and one day it will be so with every disease.

You're rightly wondering: why, for example, does Yersinia pestis exist at all? Simply put, because everything that exists also has its justification (specific function, conditioned by chronological dependence). A bee can sting you, but without it there would be almost no tasty fruit, much less botanical reproduction.

I had already written about the next aspect: what you do about 'suffering' will also become your own experience in the impact, only one day, with total understanding, there will be no suffering on earth.

Comfort: with the joy and happiness you give to other entities, it is the same way! everything comes back to you.

Least often there is that mind that wants to be born consciously, into an extremely imperfect entity, for example, to be able to experience for yourself what it is like to be a disabled person and to be dependent on help.

For the same reason, the mind 'willingly', within a life cycle, can draw any kind of disease into the being of your body in order to experience it appropriately or to explain to you in time an extreme 'misbehavior' (smoking, alcohol, too little exercise, etc.).

In addition, there is also the phenomenon of sacrifice: one spirit helps another to experience according to his "desire" or "way", so it may happen that when a child dies, because the spirit of the mother / father "wanted" to experience the experience of painful loss in order to understand the "value" of life.

All of this can happen over generations, in every conceivable combination, variation and interconnection, such as alignment.

The normal death of old age, as you would call it, is almost always based on the attainment of the maximum range of experience and understanding which the mind, in the then dying entity, can attain.

The mind wants to experience itself further, more profoundly, and soon finds itself in a new entity.

You know it, - proudly grandpa want to present your brand new smartphone and he just says to you: "Go away, the modern shit, that need i ned!" - That's exactly what I mean.

I hear you say now: "That's all terrible, horrible and unbearable, how can you allow all the suffering, terrible!"

And I say,

"Stop, look around hurried wanderer. You're where you've always wanted to be, in free life!"

Seriously. I'm not responsible for your suffering, it's you. Remember, you have an entity, but you are spirit, you experience yourself 'only' through your entity.

Do not worry, your level of experience and understanding is already quite advanced, otherwise you would have put this text aside long ago and not even read it here.

You have asked yourself the all-important question: Why is it so, - my world? Why can it not be otherwise? You can already recognize this alone: you feel, you can understand, and everything is based on your own lived experiences, - the understanding resulting from this.

Behind you lies a long way and in the future you pay attention to everything that is in, around and with you, so that it becomes the world as it pleases you best.

Religions

At all times I 'talked' to people, whenever it was possible and desired.

It's not that you're thinking, I'm picking it, like, "I'm talking to that guy, I'm not talking to another guy." Just because you don't 'receive' anything doesn't mean that nobody 'sends'.

For you, the measure of your consciousness, so to speak, the overall development of your being, your capacity for empathy, the sum of all that you have experienced, experienced, understood and comprehended, is crucial, as is, of course, your consent.

Because first of all there is only one truth for people, which has validity for everyone and this is always their own.

Just as you can walk out of the wall 'ten times' until you notice the door, you can believe whatever you like, or in other words, I can only tell my truth to those who stop telling me their own and then ask me questions without answers.

Many of the people I talked to wanted to help other people in their ways to limit their 'suffering' by trying to explain things in their context, but how difficult it is, you know now - you remember the snow.

So, for example, the Ten Commandments came into being, and from the disregard of one entity sin became, from the lust (deception) of the devils. Or, - you know now, - "I am not with you, - but you from and in me". - So I became a father.

Alcohol violates, in several ways, its essence, against yours. You know religions in which its enjoyment is forbidden.

Similarly, with the consumption of meat, - it just spoils much too quickly without a refrigerator and so it needs rules.

In the desert, without water for washing, at 40 °C in the shade, since it can stink mightily under a foreskin, so it is better one is circumcised.

What's more, they couldn't just say, "I'm talking to God." Actually, it takes a lot of courage to do that, and so it was a burning bush that I supposedly spoke of.

One of those - who did this, which you call Jesus today, left nothing untried - in his words, adapted to the zeitgeist of that time, to explain to people the reasons for their suffering and yet he did not manage to explain it to most of the people - his courage, - he was really absolute, or in other words: he actually trusted me completely.

Religions, too, are beings of your creation and adapt to the spirit of the times, and what can become of them, you have already understood from the example of your money.

"If you keep them stupid, then we will make them poor," a king once said to his pope.

Someone who recognizes the truth and yet continues to tell others the wrong, simply torments his fear of losing wealth, influence and privilege. What would become of the 'broad ass' he would have to miss - his soft pillow.

If you only listen to the teachings of others, you feel like the clock, because it always knows the hour from another.

Which is the bigger one? The fool, or the one who follows him?

Please believe me, I attached importance to a certain religion, which you should follow, there is only one, - mine!

Why do people not see the truth?

Imagine living in a room designed to your taste, feeling safe, protected, and your sleep is a deeply restorative one.

Until that day when you noticed the deadly poisonous spider who lives in the same room with you and just disappeared under your bed, from now on every itch, scratch and sound will drive you mad.

In the same way, the truth is in your reality. Often enough, simply put, it is unbearable for you and so you do not seek, because your world, it must be in order. Only in this way, it seems to you, is it possible to make a prudent, well-considered and rational decision, day after day, regarding your life, for yourself.

The truth is, however, that you're aligning your life with your fear, and panic doesn't make you think that the spider has always been in the same room with you and 'threatened' your life, but it hasn't ended to this day, so why not sit back and let the spider be the spider?

Now imagine that you are calling for help. "There is a poisonous spider in my room, please catch it!" - but no one believes you! "Where should a poisonous spider suddenly come from, what nonsense!" - So they try to convince you, because their world, too, must be in order!

And if you don't turn away from your truth now, they'll just declare you crazy, which mustn't be, it doesn't exist, because their world, it's beautiful, and so it's gonna be.

In short: All pleasure determines what may be true and so they live like children! - in their beautifully 'thought', healing world.

However, you are pleased with everything that you can safely deal with, because you have understood the entity in question and the resulting connection.

So let everyone who wants to see and experience the truth first investigate the reason for their own fear.

In conclusion

This text does not serve the purpose of explaining everything, it would not fit into any book and would protrude into the sky, far beyond the moon.

And if you want to ask a thousand questions now, be sure in one thing:

"I will not help you without your request, because only this makes it possible for me, because you have your free will from me."

In this sense, do not expect that you will get what you want, but rely on me to help you if you ask me to.

All those whom you miss painfully, you will see again at the right time and then understand EVERYTHING.

I almost forgot about it at the end. The greatest gift you can give yourself is what you call peace.

My essence is love and my spirit is life in itself, and in this respect I love you, without any condition, now and for all time!

So I am for you, whatever your heart desires:

God, Allah, Yahweh, Jehovah, Manitu, Zeus, XXXXX and finally also, if you wish, your father.

ONCE I ASKED GOD:

"WHY AM I WORTHY OF SPEAKING TO YOU?"

AND RECEIVED THIS ANSWER:

"BECAUSE NOTHING IS LESS THAN ITS ORIGIN!"

A Christmas letter to my seriously ill father

Dear Dad,

These days I can celebrate Christmas with you for the 42nd time. - Admittedly - I don't really remember the first 10, but most of them stayed well in my memory, because each of them was a special celebration in itself.

It took me a long time to understand what Christmas is really about, and you know, I see things through a different set of glasses.

I've always been irritated by this 'forced' commerce and the 'imposed' kindness at the time, being happy and happy on 'button pressure' - this was never my thing.

At Christmas we celebrate the birth of Jesus Christ and in his memory we delight the hearts of our loved ones with gifts.

Jesus left us a message. He wanted everything he did to make us understand what God's love for us really means. Even at the hour of his death, he prayed: "Father forgive them, because they do not know what they are doing." But we humans mostly understand only what we have experienced ourselves.

You too, dear dad, were once born, and every new day you had more desires and dreams that filled your life, you met mom, you fell in love, and in that love you fathered me, my brother and my sister.

For all the joy we have given you, we have always been the cause of sorrow, pain and sorrow, so many a wish, so many a dream, you have buried it for us, but your love has always been unshakable.

You've always been a role model for me -- strong, smart, humorous, successful, omniscient and patient. I measured myself against you and wanted to be like you, but I'm not like that, because you're my dad and I'm your son.

Intense and fast, that's how I lived. Everything I did -- what I've been able to experience to this day, all the highs and lows, all the emotions I've experienced, they probably last for 80 years, and all this was only possible because I knew:

If I get lost in my ways, you will catch me, because you love me.

Every Christmas, you ask me about my wishes, and every time you have fulfilled them, this year, dear Dad, I have only one wish: get healthy and let me be what I so much like to be: your son.

Unconditionally, you love me and in the same way I love you.

One day, yes, there will be time, you go home and I will be alone, but then I like to endure this pain, I know that you are waiting for me there, because I will always be, your son.

But at least this and next year not yet, I want to be to you now what you have always been to me: a safe haven, a lighthouse for orientation in the dark night!

You love us as we are, no condition, without if and but, with all our faults and weaknesses, simply because we are your children.

Today I understand: this is how God loves His creation, He is a safe haven and this is indeed the true core of Christmas.

A feast of unconditional love, a reminder of the eternal light!

In deeply connected love, Merry Christmas,

your son

AS A CHILD, I WANTED TO GROW UP AND BECOME INDEPENDENT AS QUICKLY AS POSSIBLE.

TODAY I WOULD SO LOVE TO BE YOUNG AND FREE AGAIN.

The testament of Jesus

The shepherd keeps his flock only because it gives him his daily bread; in this security they give their wool into captivity, for if even one flees from their midst, the dog immediately rushes and forces it back.

Until that moment when it will be too weak and will not be able to follow its own conspecifics, on the evening of that day it will be slaughtered.

Similarly, every king guards his people, which nourishes them and gives them freedom to do whatever they wish, so he hovers over them, and his great power confuses them with glory.

Always there are docile people who want to shine in his splendor, but it is not their head that is adorned with the crown, and so they know that it is only through this that each one of them derives his own privilege, so there is no lack of willing executors of his power, and all the people give their tithes for the preservation of the royal splendor.

They live for the benefit of one man, in joint bondage and captivity.

On that day, when old age or any other infirmity forbids the purchase of their own bread, they must not hope for grace, for now, in the hour of weakness, all show their true faces; and henceforth such a man must dwell humbly among his peers who share the same fate, and yet look down with contempt upon him, the impoverished.

They urge me to reach for the sword to slaughter all the tyrants. I spoke so many moons, but almost no one who heard me at all understood my words. They continue to be blackmailed by their fear!

So I say it again: do not worry about the well-being of tomorrow, what you will eat and what you will dress with, but care about the well-being of your nearest neighbor so that he knows everything necessary for his well-being.

So you shine to the world with your example.

So at the end of the day there will be one in the dozen who carries your well-being in his heart and never again will you plague for your daily bread with hardship, because then everyone will do their day work with joy and for fun.

Yes, I know very well: high is the price and great the sacrifice of the first who give true life to these words, above all others, because the king is strong and with him his faithful ones will hold firmly to their power, wanting to miss nothing, especially their soft pillows.

So I say with my free will: If one hits me on the cheek, so that I let go of what I am in my heart, then I hold out the other too!

I gladly bear this burden of sacrifice, for I know for sure that one day they will understand the meaning of my words, for I have seen the kingdom of my Father in heaven, and what a bright light, like mine, burns in each one forever.

But as long as there are men who love nothing more than magnificence, there will be those who twist my words, lest they know their inner light and remain dependent in the dark night, in favor of earthly power.

So be critical of all those who praise you, appreciate those who criticize you, but all those who accept you in their heart as you are in truth: love sincerely!

And when you gather together in the name of our Father - pray with him, do not make unnecessary gossip, because only with beautiful words or ceremonies in magnificent palaces do you achieve nothing. His light shines to all people, whether righteous or not. His heart is incorruptible in every way.

It is not in fact the origin of all sin, but the intention by which each one decides his own destiny!

So be ye together in prayer, as he once sent you on earth:

Free from all fear, naked, without shame and jewelry.

Carry to Him neither desire nor expectation in your heart, and shine brightly in you on all paths, visible to everyone - the eternal light!

Not fear of punishment, but the decision to love leads to Paradise! in freedom they will find me again - because only where no one has to rule, there is all love authentic, because without condition! Si vis amari, ama !

ישעיהו

The soldier kills, an executioner executes, judges punish. -
They all act on behalf of another, and yet they themselves are fully responsible for their actions!

After the same measure as you judge others, you yourself will be judged.

Whoever takes something from another with compulsion is soon robbed himself! - Even if this is done on behalf of third parties!

'Evil' cannot be fought with the sword, but only with the heart transformed into 'good'!

Why is it called banknote? - Because banknote money would be too obvious!

Your truth is what you believe in, but knowledge is always based on understanding!

He who worships what is on earth does not see the great whole.

Whoever expects will be disappointed; whoever recognizes the deception, sees the truth.

You are made of pure spirit, of water.

The Kingdom of God is in you.-Lift a stone and you will find me, break a piece of wood and I will be there.-Never truly will you experience me within the walls of magnificent palaces.

Once upon a time, a traveler in his ways met Jesus, and he asked him, "What shall I do?" and he answered, "If you want to be like me, because you know that we are the same, then I will help you, if not, I will wait, for one day you too will know yourself."

True knowledge is almost always based on error!

God did not banish us from Paradise, but we God!

Addendum

Constantly striving to actually look at everything as it really is can be very exhausting and frustrating in the long run, but it is extremely interesting, enriching, as well as enlightening and liberating.

Why, for example, do so many people enjoy a bouquet of fresh cut flowers, but they do not wilt in the vase, they die, why do they put the gifts for their loved ones under a cut down tree at Christmas?

In the flag of Europe, 12 filled pentagrams are seen as stars. The text of the anthem (Ode to Joy), Schiller wrote as a poem, commissioned by Christian Gottfried Körner, for the table of the Freemason lodge, to the three swords in Dresden. The same filled pentagrams can also be found on the American flag, next to 7 red and 6 white stripes, which stand for the 13 founding states.

The largest contiguous building in the world is the U.S. Department of Defense and it has the shape of a Pentagon, which is a framed pentagram.

The pentagram is one of the most commonly used symbols, found virtually everywhere, on state flags, military equipment, clothing and even as jewelry on the Christmas tree.

Jesus supposedly had 12 disciples, twelve months a year.

60 seconds, 60 minutes and 12 hours, so we measure time. The axis of the clock around which the hands circle symbolizes the number 13, the center of all being.

For six days God created the world, on the seventh he wanted to rest, so you shall do it to him today, every week, for a new.

Jesus fed them with 5 loaves and 2 fish, 52 weeks a year.

He allegedly died at the age of 33, every 33 years we can see the 'blood moon' in the sky.

Horus was the sun god of Egypt and was born on December 25, by the Virgin Isis. His birth was accompanied by a star in the east, followed by three "kings" (other stars) to give gifts to the newborn. He later had 12 disciples who accompanied him constantly. He healed the sick, walked on the water, etc. After being betrayed by an adversary, he was crucified and awakened from the dead after three days.

The same can be read of the god Attis, as well as of Krishna, Dionysus, Mithra and countless other gods, throughout all civilizations of our history.

Why does this myth of a Redeemer of humanity so often exist, in almost the same version?

In the east one can observe the brightest star in the night sky, called Sirius, which on December 24, together with the three brightest stars of Orion, forms a line in the sky (the three kings), following which they point on December 25 to the point at which the sun, after which it "remained" for three days and did not "wander" south, rises again.

The one presented here is nothing more than the description of the winter/summer solstice.

12 star circle signs travel together with the sun (13) across the sky of a year. On this mythologically almost all religions are based. In the evening and in the morning you can see the sun go over the water by the sea. It is for us the lifegiver in general and heals many sick people.

Money is used to rule the world:

One day a clever man came to the village and told everyone how easy it would be to end any dispute about the value of all things exchanged.

I give each one of you 1,000 thalers, and for my efforts in managing and making my money, I charge you only 2% for each new year. Enthusiastically, they took his money and 1,000 villagers suddenly felt rich.

A year passed and some had given all the money to others, so some were poor, the others very rich.

But everyone, wealthy or not, owed this smart man his 2% for the past year, and so he just created 20,000 new thalers for those who had nothing left in their stock market, and only a few years passed, and he not only became by far the richest among them, he also had absolute power over everyone else.

This is called the debt money system.

That's exactly how our money works today. If you have $1,000 in your account, it's just someone else's debt, and because of the compounding effect, all balances and therefore all debt grow exponentially. All debt is never repaid, just redistributed over and over again!

Guilt/debt, faith/believer, proceeds/redemption - do you recognize the religious character here? The word credit is derived from the Latin credere "believe". - Which God do we all really worship today?

Most people hardly ever show their 'true' face, their real essence. Adapted to the situation, we use changing 'masks' for our own benefit, or just out of fear. A necessary 'deception' in favor of daily interaction. This is so naturally useful and justified, but always remains a lie called politeness.

It's the same with everything that's been created for a particular purpose, but has a completely different statement: some smokers of a particular brand of cigarettes find themselves sitting by the fire with their friends eating bacon beans at the end of a fulfilling day, in fact, this product serves only its creator to make money from it, so it's almost everything that came about through us. The motive always depends.

Our society is constantly subject to a strong change and many people feel overwhelmed here. In short, nothing seems to be safe in the long term and the result is, of course, general uncertainty. The 'retreat' of the individual into his own 'nutshell' - a course of action focused only on his own 'survival' - has been spreading 'bully' in the world for thousands of years. The 'stranger' is perceived as a competitor who must be defeated. This is so naturally the intention of the ruling class, because the individual alone is always weak!

In fact, however, most of us just lack 'earthing'; whoever perceives himself as a 'fighter' all the time forgets what each and every one of us is; an equal, intelligent being, with a deep need for enriching social interaction, a human being!

With words and clever 'advice' alone, no one has ever really made a difference, and what matters is their personal experience.

Do you know of a place where virtually no one carries his Rolex watch, or Louis Vuitton handbag, where everyone, regardless of social class or status, can meet at 'eye height', everything seems to be a little more 'colorful' and the general 'mood' is so unobtrusively peaceful?

Those who understand themselves understand their peers better. It is not for nothing that the words 'understanding' are closely related, because 'fear' is usually only about the unknown, because it is impossible to understand it. We wear clothes not only for protection, but for most of the time simply for fear.

Whoever orients his life exclusively according to his own fear does not really live, but survives and is always guided in the interest of another. so ask yourself at any time, especially in the case of old traditions, everything that happens in the world and they want to "sell" you as truth: Cui bono - who benefits, - who - "TO THE DEVEL" profits from your daily fear.

Whether it suits us or not, we as humanity are a collective and every conceivable talent is already there, so cooperation makes more than just sense, because it is for the direct benefit of each individual, so also for YOU!

Whoever constantly lies to himself and lets himself be lied to by others is never free and remains forever the slave of another. Calculate all the direct and indirect taxes, duties and interest of your daily life and ask yourself: For whom are you working?! - Does this really have to be forever?

Let me give you a little thought example at the end:

Every country, including ours, has an immense wealth of natural resources, property, properties, roads, forests, rivers and lakes, all of which, in euros, are trillions in value.

This wealth could serve as a 'fundament' of the respective national currency, so that it represents a real, real existing value, the state then imitates this money with its own bank, it does not have to borrow from others and so it does not need interest.

Whenever new things arise through work, ideas, inventions or progress, the value of one's own currency also grows, more money arises.

To clarify: a new road is built, a new value is created and thus new money, and the value of the road is even many times higher than it cost to build, and when old things pass, a dilapidated bridge is demolished, the value also disappears, the money becomes less.

This creates a cycle of becoming and decaying, like the example of nature: our economy no longer has to grow according to the dictates of the increasing interest burden, but follows natural needs.

Only a state which administers its own money is also sovereign and so are its citizens!

If you want to drain a swamp, do not ask the crocodiles!
